Ramesh Chepur

Ramesh Chepur is a highly sought-after trainer. He has trained over 15000 professionals (Executives, Civil Servants, Managers and Student aspirants) to gain Project Management insights, expertise and obtain coveted PMP certification in the past 25 years.

He has been officially recognized trainer (to train the trainers, as well) by the Project Management Institute (PMI) and the American Management Association (AMA, USA) for training in Project Management, and has been a Reviewer and Contributor to the PMBOK Guide of the Project Management Institute (PMI).

Ramesh often reiterates that projects are the key tactical execution units which help any organization to achieve its growth ambitions. But nearly 70% of all projects fail in most organizations. Failed projects result in missing goals and failed strategies, and the cost is always more than the apparent sunk money per year. He has trained many teams to ensure projects meet strategic goals, turnaround failed projects, implement better project techniques.

He has worked with some of the most diverse and global multibillion-dollar organizations, including multinational banks, IT Services firms, educational institutions and globally. He also helped many software organizations in process development and documentation for preparing them to ISO and CMMI certification.

Ramesh has a Masters (MS) in Mathematics with two under-graduate degrees - BS in Mathematics and BS in Education & Training. He has worked as a guide and mentor to graduate students MBA/MCA for over 250 student projects; developed course content for the course 'IT for Managers' for MBA students.

Whether you need insightful keynotes, inspirational and targeted training, intimate mentoring, or review of your works, Ramesh has provided it for everyone from individual professionals to institutions in multiple industries.
